hi John,

It's not currently possible out of the box but we're working on writing importers for popular wiki systems in an upcoming release.

Cheers,

hi Marc,

We've haven't done anything specifically for MediaWiki but we are currently working on an importer for VQWiki, which I believe will eventually be released as a plugin on this site, which could then potentially be the basis for a MediaWiki importer.

Cheers,

Our company has rolled out Jive as the enterprise tool for social networking (good news for you guys I guess!). We have a large MediaWiki that we'd like to bring into Jive so an import function from MediaWiki ... bring it on!

Thanks for letting us know, Dan, and congratulations on the Jive SBS deployment. Due to the complexity of importing from a wide variety of products (along with multiple versions per product) we've done most (all?) content migrations as custom projects, and this has proved to work pretty well. Making these importers work out-of-the-box is not a project we're going to take on at the moment.

Hi,

is the MediaWiki import now possible, or is the project still in progress?

Cheers

We are currently evaluating Jive Clearspace as a possible candidate for our Social Networking tool. We have quite a bit of documentation already written under MediaWIKI. The biggest question I've encountered is not so much about MediaWIKI .vs. TikiWIKI .vs. etc etc, but 2 key things regarding these types of things.

1. As WIKIs grow in popularity, there doesn't seem to be an industry standard being established regarding "wiki tag language", if there is, it seems that each vendor has decided to re-invent the wheel, not sure why this is the case.
2. At least in MediaWIKI, it will accept standard HTML tag language, but it appears that this isn't the case under Jive's editor?

When all is said and done, I would think it should be able to at least display standard tag language.
